“ Most of my life experiences with Jim were at our Aunt Lena's house. Jim loved getting out of the city and spending time on her and Uncle Eldon's farm. The last time I actually saw Aunt Lena at her house, I was surprised when Jim came to visit as well. Aunt Lena was having trouble with her VCR and she called Jim for help. He made the special trip there to help her simply because that's the kind of guy he was. When he stooped to the floor and looked behind the television he saw that the machine was not plugged in. He held the unconnected cord up for those in the living room to see and made that trademark facial expression that communicated, "well, it is what it is!". But all I heard him say to Aunt Lena was, "it's okay, Aunt Lena, it should work now." That's just the sweet kind of guy he was.
