“ hello Roseanne. sorry to read about your dad. i was at my mom's house-she still lives on woodmont-and saw it on the obit page.i looked across the street and thought about being a kid again.i don't remember your dad real well but i remember he wasn't a neighborhood meanie.sometimes a baseball or football would end up in your backyard from the court or the dergo's backyard. your dad would laugh and throw or kick it back. hope you are healthy and have had a happy life.bob sheill

“ Angelo was a good friend to me and my young daughter, Amanda, at a time when we needed a friend. He would call, or send a little note, or a toy for Amanda. She is all grown up now. I lost track of Angelo when he left Gladwin, but I always wondered what became of him. He was a kind and thoughtful person. My thoughts to his family.

“ Angelo was a great storyteller. I've heard many of his stories over the years but never tired of hearing them from him because of his emotion, infectious humor and his love of entertaining his friends and family. One of his stories that I always enjoyed was the one when he was in the service. He had contracted scarlet fever and the doctors gave him 5 years to live. That was over 60 years ago! He proved them wrong by his love of life and his positive views. He loved telling that story and I always laughed along with him. Angelo will be missed but he won't be forgotten as long as his family and friends are still alive. He lived a long and full life and had no regrets. Even when he was terminal, he stated "I lived to be 87 years old, do you think you will live to be 87 years old? He was a realist but one of those human beings that you enjoyed being with because of his positivity. If there is a heaven, I'm sure he is arranging a foursome for golf. God bless Angelo!
