“ I met Anita several years ago when I served as the director for her mother's funeral. After the arrangements, Anita and I kept in touch, and she even represented me in finding my first home. I knew that Anita had been ill, and I had not kept as close in contact as I would have liked for the past few years. I loved her dearly, and send my prayers to all of her family members.

“ My dear Nene- I wish I knew all the answers about why things had to be this way. You fought so hard & I am so sorry your life was cut short. You changed so many people's lives, and so many people will miss you- especially our small intimate family. You will be with me everytime I make galooshtie soup, everytime I wear sexy heels, everytime I look at a garden and everytime I order a cosmo with a lime!. You are not forgotten, I love you tons and know I will see you again one day! Love, Niche

“ I always wondered about the origin of the descriptor "social butterfly." Until I met Anita. She embodied this metaphor, flitting from friend to friend and flower to flower bringing sweetness from place to place. Now you are at peace, but something tells me come next Spring you'll be all cocooned up somewhere, awaiting the sun to join us once again in another form.
