“ A yellow sweater and lime green slacks, Fast Eddie was a golfin' man, His life and heart opened-up like the clubhouse doors on a brisk Sunday morning, Just before the sun rises to warm last nights dew on the blades of Bermuda, The crinkle-crinkle of the ball being sunk could be heard when he spoke of 'rounds gone by, of friends and family as we walked the back nine. Impeccably fashioned with wit and confidence that grows from sinking a shot that many say couldn't be sunk. Fast Eddie, you will be missed on this course, that is certain. But, wherever three friends gather and await the appearance of a new, A faint echo will be heard drifting toward the tee box, "Need a Fourth? Or should I just play through?!" Goodbye for now Fast Eddie, old friend, We will meet once again for a round that I am certain, You will surely Win.
