“ The Jewish people have a tradition of naming children after dead relatives. I think it stems from not really believing in an afterlife as "heaven" is to the rest of us. They believe that the dead live forever because of the thoughts and memories of the living. Being named after someone means each time the name is used there is a spark of eternity for that dead person. It is, of course, different for Christians and especially Catholics. However, I believe Greg will live on because there are so many of us who have great memories of him and he will pop into our heads so often. He used to sit almost next to me, and every time I glance in the direction of his desk I see him sitting there with an easy, but also intense, expression on his face as he struggled to solve our unending Oracle problems. But, never, ever did he get upset or irritable like the rest of us! That is a wonderful memory. You will all take the rest of your lives to cope with his loss. In some measure we will, too. He was a good man and needed more time. It was simply not to be. But again, he's living on in our thoughts. That will not be taken away.
