“ I was a challenging child. I often questioned her and refused to take no for an answer. She used to say to me, "What part of, 'no' don't you understand?" I would come back with, "The N!" Sometimes O, depended on my mood. Although we butted heads most weeks, there were moments when we would watch Star Trek and make fun of the commercials, or listen to albums and CDs while we danced around the house.. She would smoke Capri Light 120s while waiting for her next story to come on TV. It's the little things.. The songs she would play, the games on the computer she liked.. It those things that will remind me of her until my end..

I admired her strength. She taught me to be courageous and to never play the victim role. I may have put the majority of grey hairs on her head but she loved us; my brother, sister and I. Her last wish was to see us once more..

"You can't have two smart ass parents without having some smart ass children." -Mary.

Some words we used for things around the house growing up:

Piggies - Another word for toes.

Zapper - A remote.

Beeper - A microwave

Poofer: This just meant fart.. She normally said this right before she would, like a warning..

I'll miss the inappropriate jokes we would make. Hand dancing in the car. Karaoke challenges. Stupid photo and video taking. People watching. I love you mom.
