“ Dearest Sarah,

My tears have finally evaporated. My pain has diminished. Your passing was devastating to all who knew and loved you. All that's left are the great memories of your childhood and life.

You were such an entertaining imp as a child. I have so many memories of the good times we had. Whether we were running around the playground with your friends playing 'Monster', or struggling to survive that terrible storm when we were sailing on Walled Lake, or when you came home from school and tried to convince me that the ballpoint pen marks all over your face (You looked like a Maori warrior!) came from a ballpoint pen that was stuck in the snowball that someone threw at your head...you were always a pleasure to be around. I will miss your hearty laugh and your ready smile. I will miss your voice.

Now your pain is gone...no more fear, no more sorrow, no more sadness. Now you are embraced in the loving arms of the Lord. Your gain...our loss. Rest in peace my darling daughter. I'll speak with you tonight as I go to sleep.

*Always,
Dad*

I remember meeting Sarah (Terry is our cousin) when she was small. Such a cute and fun kid, with the most serious brown eyes.

Had a lot of good times that summer I was out in Detroit hanging out with Terry, Carolyn and the girls.

I hope everyone can find solace in their fond memories of her, and that the grief will subside some over time.

love, Sarah

“ Sarah has been around almost as long as I can remember. I looked up to her so much when I was younger. She gave me my first Sarah McLachlan cd, my first incense burner, and got me interested in celestial art. She was there for us when our dad got sick and later passed away. She had a impact on my life, and she will be missed.
