“ I met Steve and Mar in the early to mid 1990's. I met them again after Bryson was born and again when he was a young boy. I didn't know Steve much directly, but saw that childlike laughter, his playfulness, and his big heart. I see from Mar, who I know much more closely, how lovely, Steve was and that he was a man who pushed himself to keep growing and be his best version of himself. I highly admire and respect that.

To Nancy, his fiancé, a woman I've never met, I want to tell you how much I honor and respect your maturity and composure throughout the funeral as his fiancé and the one he romantically loved, and was to become Steve's wife, while also hearing how much he loved Mar, and she loved him as copayments to Bryson and as friends over most of their adult lifespan. You just lost the man you were going to spend the rest of your life with. The bucket of love is infinite... We can spend our lives with one person and love others even though our relationship with others changes. My deepest condolences to you.

Bryson... It's really OK to cry and scream and yell and let yourself fall apart and that's OK. That night your dad was killed. It was a horrible tragedy that you witnessed. So young for you to lose your dad. I know you have a wonderful sense of humor and a heart of gold and your. I can see how much love and caretaking you do if your mom. Please be sure that you can get the care for yourself. My heart aches for all of you.

And tomorrow, who I just found out about Steve's death on Christmas I watched the funeral and it's entirety and you gave Steve a wonderful tribute with your lifelong love for him since you were married, even post divorce you were able to forgive him and except him and push him to be a better self, and he pushed himself and I feel your pain deeply and I see how loving you are and how you give long hugs, and you invite Nancy to be part of your family because you're all united in loving Steve. You walk the spiritual walk that doesn't belong in anyone religious box. That walk is the commonality of all religions in their best aspects of being patient forgiving, excepting, honest, loving, true kind. You give long hugs that are in the most empathic, warmest way, and I'm sure Steve was proud of you too. I admire you. I respect you and I know you will get through this with all of your friends and family. I'm one of them. I love you. Laurie Sills

“ *I am have been trying for days to put my grief into words, only to find hallow thoughts that seem so selfish; I am embarrassed to voice them. For more than 30 years, Chet and I spoke as little as two or three times a year or as often as every few weeks. Each time, it was as if no time had passed since we walked the halls of High School together. There was a comfort for both us knowing we were there. I called or texted him every year on Bryson's birthday because becoming a father was, by far, the best day of his life. When things were good or bad or hard or fun; we would text or call just to share the news. My heart is broken for everyone who knew him, everyone who loves him and those who won't get the chance. “ Steve, I did not know you very long. Thank you for your help with cutting up the willow tree, sorry that you got stung if you did by the hornets nets that was hiding inside. And thank you for all your contributions to helping build a room for Dion at my house. Know that your contribution will help reshape and redirect an entire legacy for a young man in his time of need. You have an amazing spirit and you will be missed by your band of brothers.

Until we meet again.

“ It was a long time ago when a newly married couple moved in next door to my family in Westland. We had many years of memories being neighbors, watching my kids grow, Scruffy and Kinker, chats over the fence ❤️

I'm so sorry for the loss of Steve and I hope the memories Bryson and you Marsha have, comfort you two in this time of heartbreak.
