“ I wish to share my condolences to Anne, Lance and Laric. Unquestionably, one of the great highlights of my return for my 35th at Cranbrook a year ago was seeing Werner, who, despite his illness, retained all of the personality and energy I remembered so well when I first painted your balcony! Werner was one reason I think I moved to Europe. His fondness for Germany and the wines somehow always remained with me and when I visited some of the great vineyards in the Rheingau district, I always raised my glass to the man who snuck me down to his cellar in Michigan to taste what he called "real wine." Werner, introduced me to a love for life in far away exotic places. But more than that, he provided my parents with a friendship that was something I always admired. He introduced them and me to a love for life in what was, at the time, a far away exotic place known as Detroit or the U.P. Werner was always a man well respected and loved in my family. I will miss his laugh, the twinkle in his eye and the way he made you feel important and part of his family, regardless of who you were. Werner was the kind of man who never talked about where he got his MBA which means something to a Boston native. He was more concerned with where he was going in the future. And with whom he would enjoy the journey. Next week I will be back in the Rheingau... Werner will most definitely be a part of that journey, and always will be whenever I return. For that I will be forever grateful.

“ *My wife Sandy and I wish to express our condolences to Anne, Lance, and Laric on the loss of her husband and their father, Werner K. Lehmann. As a consultant to SESCO and particularly to Werner I spent many hours with him and with the people of SESCO. We improved the quality program at SESCO and I helped Werner with the many projects he was involved in. It was always a pleasure to see Werner and to work with him and have some wonderful social interactions. It was also good to stop by the Chamberlain Bakery after my visits to SESCO and pick up some of their fine bread to take home. I will remember Werner with fond memories of a good man who cared about his family, his community especially Hockey Teams and his business associates.
