“ I lived across the street from Mr. Faga on Brockton. He was a good man with a good heart that treated me well as a child and gave me valuable advice as I entered my teen years. When I need service hours for NHS, I helped him around the house as his health and mobility started to decline. In those moments, he would share a story about life, his mother and the love of his dog. They day I came to visit my parents with my first child, I had to take a moment to cross the street; so, he could meet her. He was gracious as always.

It was said those final years as we saw his health decline as my dad and I were often called over to help or assist his medically, but it will never tarnish those memories of his pulling that big boat of a Ford into his garage, smiling from across the way, and calling our my name while waving just to say hello.

I miss you Bill. Until we meet again.
